Example program overview, (Kindergarten, ages 6-7 years)

This child protection program aims to assist children better protect themselves from those who might sexually abuse and molest them.

The program is divided into four units:

1. private parts
2. feelings
3. good and bad touch
4. secrets.

Each unit involves a series of classroom activities during which the children:

- Learn that people who sexually assault children are doing something wrong and unacceptable
- Gain a clearer understanding of their private parts and the language used to refer to them
- Learn about the nature of appropriate and inappropriate touch
- Develop the ability to recognise, name and talk about good and bad feelings
- Gain a clearer understanding of their rights to say “No” to situations that give rise to negative feelings
- Have an opportunity to reflect on who are the people in their world that they would trust and feel comfortable talking with about these issues.

Each unit requires about 20 mins, some may take longer depending on the class.

Duty of Care and Responsibility

'There is always a possibility that a child in the class has been the victim of some form of sexual abuse, but never disclosed the abuse to an adult. The teacher must avoid talking about what a child "should" or "must" do in these situations, but rather what they "could" or "may" do. Acknowledge that telling someone can be a very difficult thing to do. We want to avoid making a child victim feeling guilty or in some way responsible if they feel unable to tell someone about what has happened to them',
